A Message From Our Chair & President

DEAR FRIENDS,

For almost four decades, Nashville Metro Parks and Recreation and Friends of Warner Parks have worked together to preserve and enhance Nashville's largest public park for Nashvillians and visitors alike. This successful public-private partnership has strengthened infrastructure, expanded programming, and improved access to ensure Warner Parks is welcoming and safe for all.

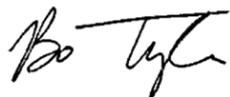

This past year, we celebrated key accomplishments. The completion of the Percy Warner Golf Course and Clubhouse renovation marks an exciting new chapter, enhancing the park experience for golfers and park users. Additionally, the development of a Resource Management Plan—capturing decades of historical data and conservation efforts—provides a thoughtful framework for protecting these beloved green spaces over the next decade. Our commitment to ecosystem health also continues with extensive efforts to remove invasive plant species, supporting native plants and wildlife.

Warner Parks is more than a refuge for people; it's a vital habitat for plants and wildlife, a place where nature truly thrives.

We are grateful to our loyal supporters, volunteers, and dedicated Board of Directors who champion the Warner Parks. Your commitment to our mission is the foundation of everything we do.

Thank you for your continued support.

Sincerely,

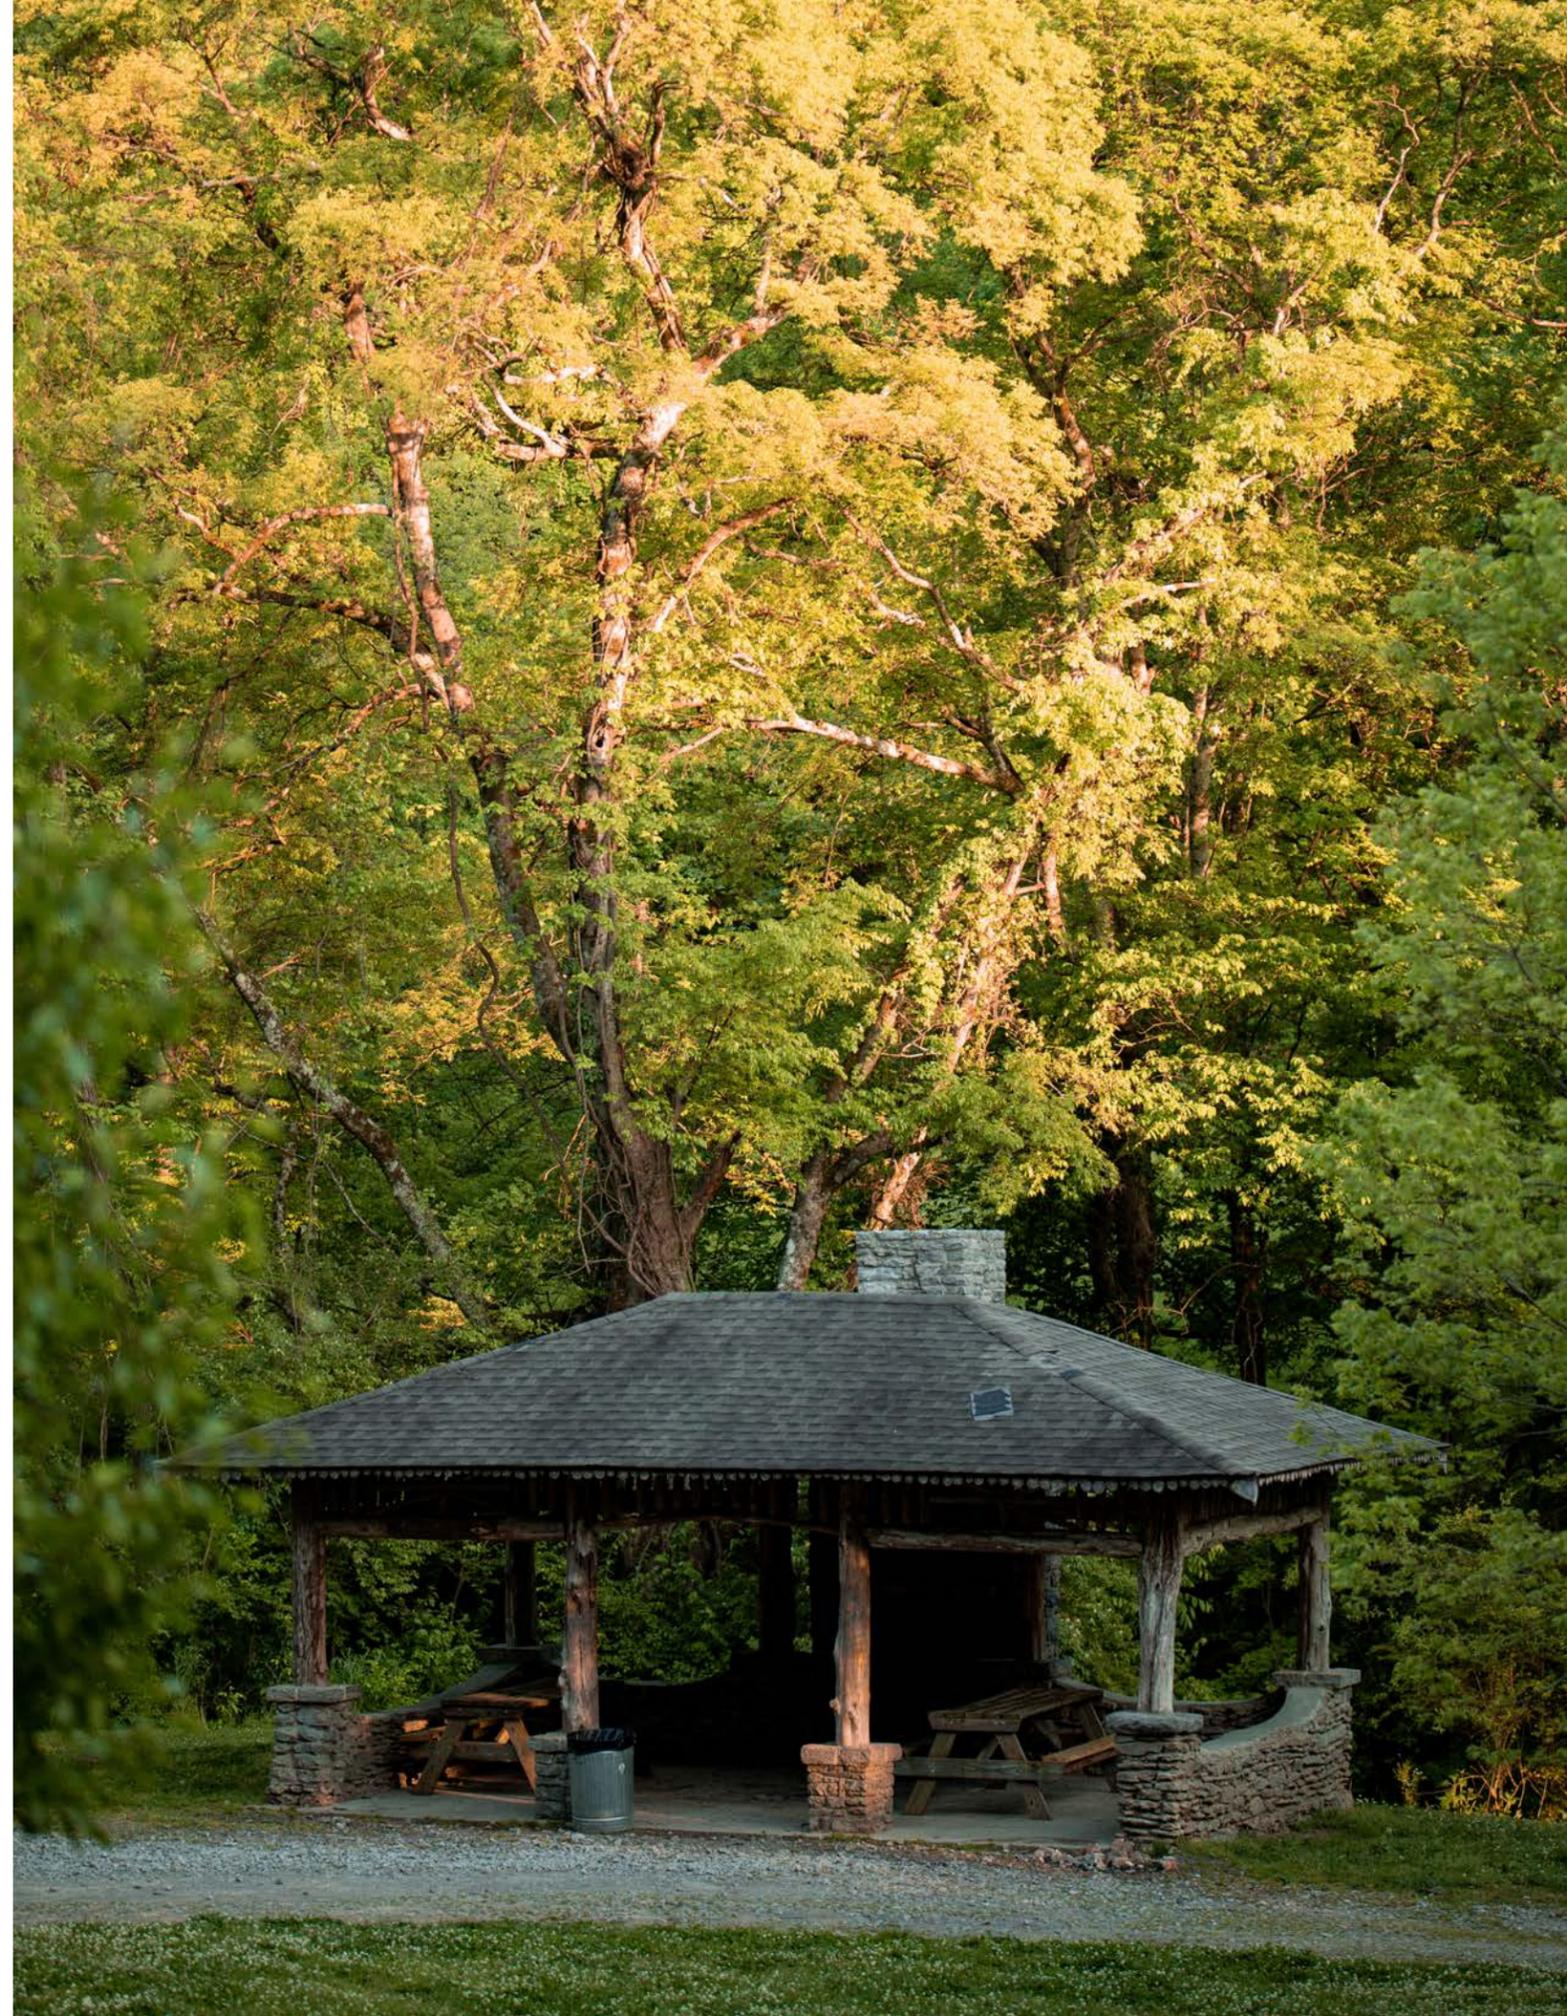

Bo Tyler

Protecting the Natural Legacy of Warner Parks

The Warner Parks forests play a crucial role in enhancing both our physical and mental health. They act as natural air purifiers that contribute to cleaner air and better respiratory health. Walking, hiking, and cycling through the Warner Parks forests promote cardiovascular health and reduce the risks associated with sedentary lifestyles. The forests at Warner also help regulate the climate by cooling the atmosphere and sequestering carbon, which mitigates heat-related illnesses and long-term impacts of climate change.

Beyond these physical benefits, forests significantly improve mental well-being. Time spent in nature has been shown to reduce stress, anxiety, and depression, thanks to the calming effects of natural surroundings. The peacefulness of Warner’s forests makes them valuable spaces for mental rejuvenation and emotional balance.

We also know that the wooded slopes of Warner Parks are important for maintaining the rich mix of species, or biodiversity, that has characterized our landscapes for generations. This natural legacy encompasses the forest, wildlife, and water resources characteristic of Middle Tennessee. Friends of Warner Parks is committed to conserving this natural legacy and ensuring that future generations inherit a healthy park that has played such a vital role in our community. A key aspect of this work is ensuring our forests are free of non-native invasive plant species that are a significant threat to our local biodiversity and the environmental health of our forests.

Invasive Free is our ambitious goal. Globally, the destructive nature of invasive species has been recognized as a major driver of biodiversity loss and habitat destruction. Friends of Warner Parks is embarking on its largest ever conservation initiative to remove and treat over 2,000 acres of non-native plants that have over the years begun to degrade the forest health in the parks. The stewardship of our forests can no longer wait.

Restoring Clare's Meadow and Tennessee's Historic Grasslands

As we continue to aggressively remove invasive species from our Warner Parks forests, we are also working to convert our open fields into native grasslands and meadows, an initiative that will support the recovery of grassland birds and pollinators that have seen drastic population declines over the last several decades.

Tennessee has lost well over 95% of its historic grasslands, impacting the many wildlife species that depend on and thrive in these critical habitats including 90% of our rare or endangered species. The alarming reduction of native wildflowers and perennial grasses through habitat loss and development has made native grasslands/meadows one of the most endangered and impacted ecosystems in North America.

This Warner Parks meadow restoration project was created in the spirit of Friends of Warner Parks founder and dear friend, Clare Armistead, who fervently believed we have a responsibility to care for the places we love most.

With the support of the Armistead family and close friends of Clare, we successfully raised the seed funds for this project and began the journey to restore approximately 6 acres in Percy Warner Park, affectionately named, "Clare's Meadow".

Charting the Future of Conservation: Tennessee Ecologist Terry Cook Joins Warner Parks Team

Friends of Warner Parks is excited to welcome Terry Cook, former Tennessee State Director of The Nature Conservancy, to guide conservation and resource management efforts within Warner Parks. With over three decades of experience in conservation strategy and natural resource stewardship, Terry is known for his dedication to protecting diverse landscapes and fostering sustainable ecosystems.

At Friends of Warner Parks, Terry will guide innovative strategies to preserve the parks' unique habitats, address environmental challenges, and strengthen resource management practices. Terry's vision aligns with the mission of Friends of Warner Parks, ensuring Warner's woodlands, meadows, and wildlife are protected for future generations to enjoy and appreciate.

Under his leadership, Warner Parks aims to enhance ecosystem resilience, expand native plant restoration, and create new conservation initiatives that benefit both the environment and the Nashville community.

Protecting Warner Parks Cave Ecosystems

Warner Parks, like much of Middle Tennessee, is home to caves and unique karst ecosystems, shaped by the region’s abundant limestone bedrock. However, in recent years, these caves have faced increasing threats from vandalism, litter, and unauthorized entry, all of which disrupt the delicate balance of these fragile habitats.

In collaboration with local experts, scientists, and community members, Friends of Warner Parks led a significant conservation effort to protect one of the Warner Parks’ largest known caves.

The project was launched with three central goals: preserve and secure the cave as a safe space for cave inhabitants; minimize human disturbance; and educate the public on the critical role caves play in our ecosystem. Over the past year, efforts have included installing secure entry points to limit unauthorized access, conducting regular health assessments of the bat population, and carefully monitoring environmental conditions within the caves to support the bats’ hibernation cycles and breeding seasons.

In recent months, park naturalists have already noticed a significant increase in cave inhabitants – salamanders, bats, spiders – that finally have relief from vandalism and disturbance. With the support of our volunteers, donors, and community partners, we can be a part of a larger legacy of protecting wildlife and the spaces they call home.

Avian Research to Track Species Behavior and Health

The Warner Park Public Bird Banding Station monitors migratory and resident bird populations in Warner Parks and Nashville. Through careful banding and tracking, the station gathers data that informs conservation strategies, promotes biodiversity, and educates the public about birds and ecosystems, helping to preserve local wildlife for future generations.

At the Warner Park Nature Center, the 43-year-old public banding station offers a unique opportunity for students and the broader community to witness research and see a bird up close in hand.

Some of our favorite captures this year include a 7-year old American Goldfinch (which typically has a lifespan of 3-6 years), Summer and Scarlet Tanagers, a Cape May Warbler, and Rose-breasted Grosbeaks (which have not been captured in Warner Parks since 2010). On September 4th, we observed 14 warbler species in the banding area including a rare Lawrence's Warbler, a first for Warner Parks!

Motus: Tracking Bird Migration through Global Radio-telemetry Network

The Motus Wildlife Tracking System uses tiny radio transmitters and satellite receiver stations to track bird movements, offering precise data on migration patterns, stopover sites, and habitat needs. This technology enhances conservation by revealing critical areas for protection, helping scientists understand migration challenges, and guiding conservation strategies for vulnerable bird populations globally.

Since Fall 2020, the Warner Parks BIRD Program has radio-tagged 5 species of thrushes and Purple Martins to help us better understand migration stopover and roosting behavior, and breeding and winter habitat use in Warner Parks. This year, we radio-tagged a total of 55 birds, including 6 Wood Thrushes, a species of concern in Tennessee, as part of a hemispheric, range-wide research project led by the US Fish and Wildlife Service.

We continue to learn about the importance of Warner Parks as a migratory stopover as birds rest and recuperate on their migration journey. This year, we tracked several birds on their migration journey, including a Gray-cheeked Thrush who altered its path to avoid spring storms and a Swainson's Thrush that stayed in Warner Parks to build fat reserves before an epic migration through Central America (see journey below).

A Swainson's Thrush (pictured left) was first radio-tagged in Warner Parks on September 11, 2024. The thrush was last detected by a Motus station in Warner Parks on September 26th and migrated to Belize (detected 4 days later) and Costa Rica (detected 10 days later); photo by Graham Gerdeman.

Bridging the Gap: Connecting Nashville Youth to Nature

The Nature Discovery Program, a collaboration between Friends of Warner Parks and the Warner Park Nature Center, provides vital nature-based education for youth in Nashville’s underserved communities. This program bridges access gaps to environmental education by working with Metro Parks Community Centers, where barriers like limited transportation and financial constraints often prevent youth from engaging with natural spaces.

Over the past year, the program has expanded to reach additional community centers, offering hands-on experiences through initiatives like the Nature Detectives after-school program, which immerses children in local biodiversity. Field trips, outdoor skills training, and nature exploration provide opportunities for youth to gain critical scientific knowledge and build meaningful connections with the natural world.

Key 2024 initiatives include extending the program’s reach to more neighborhoods, developing specialized training for community center staff, and fostering diversity and accessibility within environmental education. With a focus on inclusivity and stewardship, the Nature Discovery Program is cultivating the next generation of environmental advocates, while ensuring all children in Nashville have opportunities to learn, grow, and experience the benefits of nature.

8 Miles of Equestrian Trails Now Accessible to Hikers

Percy Warner Park now features 8 miles of newly restored Dual-use Trails, allowing hikers access to areas of Warner Parks previously only accessible by horse. The Old Beech Trail, part of our Primitive Trail Restoration Project, emphasizes sustainable use and preservation, following specific guidelines—such as hikers yielding to horses and no bikes or dogs permitted.

This restoration is part of a broader effort to maintain the natural beauty and accessibility of the park's trail network, which also includes ongoing primitive trail repairs and management to ensure safety and environmental sustainability.

Percy Warner Golf Course Reopens Following 20-Month Restoration

The Percy Warner Golf Course has reopened after a 20-month, $2.5 million restoration, funded by private contributions through a partnership with Metro Nashville Parks and Recreation, Friends of Warner Parks, and the Tennessee Golf Foundation.

Designed by Bruce Hepner, the upgrade modernized the 1937 course with new irrigation, expanded tee boxes, a practice area, and woodland restoration. The improvements enhance the course's natural appeal and accessibility, supporting junior golf programs and community connection to the sport. The course reopened for public play on June 30, 2024, with an inaugural "Donor Play Day."
